ABSTRACT

ADE ULFAH, 2021 The Effectiveness of Group Work in Reading of Narrative Texts (An Experimental in the Second Grade of Islamic Senior High School MAN 3 Pandeglang), Skripsi, English Education Department, The Faculty of Tarbiyah and Teachers' Training, Sultan Maulana Hasanuddin State Islamic University Banten. This study was aimed to see The Effectiveness of Group Work in Teaching Reading of Narrative Texts whether the second year students of Madrasah Aliyah Negeri 3 Pandeglang who learned reading of narrative texts through group work showed better achievement scores than through Grammar Translation Method (GTM). This study was as a quantitative study since it required numerical data. The writer conducted experiments in two different classes with two different techniques. Besides, the writer used group work in one class (experimental class) and GTM in another one (controlled class). In analyzing the data, the writer used t-test to analyze the students' achievement test, by holding a pre-test to know whether or not the two different classes were relatively at the same level, and post-test to know whether or not there was any significant different achievement of using group work and GTM in teaching narrative texts. In this study, the writer took the sample only two classes taken from class XI-A (25 students) and XI-B (25 students). The sample based on purposive random sampling technique. So, XI-A was as experiment class using group work and XI- B as controlled class using GTM in teaching narrative texts. The findings of this study: there was significant effect between the second year students of Madrasah Aliyah Negeri 3 Pandeglang who had been taught the narrative texts using group work and Grammar Translation Method. So, it could be concluded that the use of group work had better achievement for students' performance rather than GTM in teaching reading of narrative texts.
