

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

Based on the analysis of the data in the previous chapter, the writer can make conclusion about an analysis of students' ability in pronouncing words on dialogue as follow:

1. Based on the result of the analysis, Students' ability in dialogue is very low. The author found that six students got very good grades, nineteen students got good grades, three students got fair grades and two students got low grades. The highest score of students writing scores is 24 whereas the lowest is 10. That is, most students get low grades rather than on high.
2. The writer found that the students' problems on making dialogue text those are: Lack of vocabulary so they can not dialogue in English well. Most students can not translate some English words into Indonesian. The students find it difficult in pronunciation and fluency, the authors also find there are many students who make mistakes in using grammar. The students find difficulty to express themselves by speaking English.

Several factors that affect the weakness of students in dialogue is the students are lazy to learn and use the vocabulary in their daily activities. The students do less exercise. Teachers lack motivation.
